Sound Advice Column

By Bill Edgeworth

If you've never bought by mail before, you'll probably be inclined to choose the company offering the lowest price and place your order. More experienced buyers realize that although price may be the most important single element, there are several other factors to consider before making a decision.

Does the dealer stock the items you want or does he place them on order with the factory upon receipt of your order? What is the dealer's procedure for delivery? Does he select the best method considering safety, speed and economy, or does he pick the method easiest for him? Does the dealer have a well-informed customer service department which is ready, willing, and able to help in the event of a lost or damaged shipment?

These are just a few of the other important factors to be considered before you send your order and check.

When you're ready to place an order, invest $.75 or $1.00 in a call to the dealer. Find out if the merchandise is in stock and when you can expect delivery. Get the name of the person giving you the information so you'll have someone to call in the event of a future problem. This personal contact will also give you an idea of the attitude of the organization.

Check to see if the merchandise will be held for 72 hours until your order and deposit arrive. It's also a good idea to check with the local Better Business Bureau to find out something about the dealer's record. Find out, also, if you can, if the dealer is a franchised distributor for the products you're interested in or if he's "picking up" the items for you. This might have a strong bearing on how long it will take for delivery or whether you'll receive the unit at all or have to settle for a refund after a long wait.

We feel that when all the important factors in making a decision are considered, we offer more. We hope you'll give us the opportunity to prove it.

Thank You,
